The president had worked with all of the cabinet members to reassure them that if they became involved in the action, and there was a reasonable chance of the war ending in their favor, it would help with their future careers. This invention relates to magnetic disc drive systems and is more particularly concerned with servo systems used in such systems. Recent advances in the magnetic recording media art allow magnetic storage systems to be used for large amounts of data, without a prohibitive cost to data density. However, the continuing trend of higher data density may require even further increases in magnetic recording head design and performance. In a magnetic disc drive system, a read/write head is often placed in close proximity to one or more magnetic recording discs, which are typically encased in a housing. One or more of the recording discs are mounted on a spindle and rotated at high speeds by means of a motor at a constant speed. The distance between the head and the disc is maintained very small and the head is supported in close proximity to the disc surface by means of an air bearing. The drive is thus a "flying" head type system. The requirement for closely controlled positioning of the

Q: php strtotime not giving the correct time when date format is 1 week

In my mysql I have two fields "Start" datetime and "End" datetime. I want to calculate the time difference in seconds. I am using the strtotime to give me the difference. The problem is when I use this code, it gives me the difference but in weeks instead of hours.

$time = strtotime($row['End']);

---

```
$time1 =
  strtotime($row['Start']);
$time2 = $time1 - $time;
$difference = $time2 / 3600;

This gives me the difference in hours: 1388067600 -> 1388035400 -> -18000

If the the column has the data 2/26/16 2:44 PM this code gives me the difference: 1388067600 -> 1388044900 -> -180000

Is there a way to use the correct difference without doing any format conversions? A: Try this:

$difference =

---

strtotime($row['End']); $time2
    = strtotime($row['Start']);
    $difference = $difference -
    $time2; The strtotime returns
a number. // // MBColorText.m
